Description:

Mirror, Mirror who do YOU see? is a book for all the wonderful biracial, multiracial, & intercultural children around the globe who experience the best of many diverse worlds but also the worst when uneducated people single them out.

This is a must read for parents seeking to explain diversity issues, the positives and the bad stuff, plus beginning to build an identity for their child. If your child is older it will greatly benefit their self esteem. I loved how there are definitions in the book, a parents page and at the end, a page for children to put their own picture and write about their family. I've never seen another book geared toward so many ethnicities told from a child's point of view. Even older kids can read the stories and get valuable meaning out of the children telling their stories. Also, I never realized that people within the same ethnicity but different cultures, have a lot to share too!! Interfaith & transracial adoption are also included. The author tried to cover a lot of topics. I'd recommend this book for not only families but libraries, schools, youth programs and community organizations too. Parents, add this to your child's library!!
